France, no less than England, can lie the reconstruction of the dismembered States of the American Union into a new compact government. The power of such a State would be intolerable. It would recemble the separate might of the two contording parties is this way, joined under one banner and dicied by one centralization. It would at once come Continental, and preceed possibly on a asher of disagrenable crueades. Like Alexander, it might look for new scenes of donquest; and then what becomes of the Canadas, of French internate in Mexico?

So long as the conflict between the North and South was equal, neither Napoleon, nor the British Ministry, had a word to say. What they did mutter was mere trim and evasion. It was intended to degrive, or at best, to defer. If one should see a fight between a pair of lions he would not interfere before the contest reached a manageable oliman.
